The Piette Program
Expeditionary Learning in France

Travel back in time from the D-Day beaches in Normandy to genuine caves of the Paleolithic era with the Piette program in France. For the selected team of ten students, the trip will include hands-on archeological excavation on a private site, behind-the-scenes tours of museums, linguistic activities as well as numerous other tours and visits in well-known places and hidden villages. Each student will pursue a specific research project associated with the trip and will be prepared for it with three spring seminars on PA campus. Students will present their research in the fall term at a campus-wide event hosted by the Peabody Museum.

This interdisciplinary program was designed by the French and History Departments in collaboration with the Peabody Museum of Archeology. It will be organized by Andover faculty representing the three entities.

Requirements: Strong interest in at least one of the featured disciplines, namely French, history (including art history), or prehistory and archeology. There is no specific French requirement, but you must be willing to learn some language. Advanced students of French will be provided with specific activities.

The Piette Program is made possible in part by a grant from the Abbot Academy Association. The Abbot Academy Association was founded upon the merger of Abbot Academy and Phillips Academy in 1973. Abbot Academy was the oldest incorporated school in the country for the higher education of young women. The Abbot Academy Association seeks to foster and promote the legacy and spirit of Abbot Academy on the campus and in the programs of Phillips Academy.
